

An ardent philanthropist, psychologist and a single mother, Malini designed the interiors all by herself. The main thought while designing was of orchestrating a space that is elegant yet comforting. "For me, a house is undoubtedly a sacred space wherein one can relax and unwind in peace. With my daughter, three dogs and three cats, I knew precisely what I was looking for in the house design from the very beginning" she explained.

As you walk through, the wide windows throughout the house capture a view of the startling landscape outside. The predominant design feature of the house is an infinite amount of natural light thrown in through all directions due to proper cross ventilation. "Pulling everything together with different textures and shapes, there is an inviting and open feel while you enter the house. Oversized couches for lounging and Lama Moroccan rugs have been added for warmth," shares Malini.

Working with details, the living spaces flow one into another in an informal and open-plan arrangement because of the tropical climatic conditions of the place. One of the first self-made billionaire women, Saba strongly believes that everyday life can be easily transformed by incorporating good design. "I incorporated a mix of elements which are deemed necessary for the hot tropical climate here in Malaysia. Each room has hardwood flooring, marble bathrooms, teak cupboards and mahogany. The furniture too is clean-lined and fuss-free. Moreover, as I love crystals and their spiritual powers - we have made sure to install them according to Feng Shui. The bedroom in the house has a princess feel
